* This sort of money, called Braeteates Strasbourgeoises, were emitted from the year 1000 (about) up to 1262. They were very thin, and the impression on one side made a hollow on the other. They were mute, that is, without device. They represented different subjects or personages, and are very rare. These five coins represent an escutcheon, bearing a band, which is the coat of arms of Strasbourg, and a fleur de lys, which seems to have been formed gradually from an old type composed of two bishops' croziers, joining on each side a larger one.

This money was positively feudal, and employed first by the lords, whilst the Emperor continued to issue solid pieces with double impression.
